

Files in C++ Solutions

- Explain what is meant by a file in C++
 - In C++, a file is a stream of bytes identified by a filename
 - A sequence of bytes of unknown length with no structure

- Describe what happens when a C++ program reads from a file
 - The C++ library calls a function in the operating system's API
 - This will copy data from a storage device into our program

- Describe what happens when a C++ program writes to a file
 - The C++ library calls a function in the operating system's API
 - This will copy data from our program onto a storage device